

Revision On Cats behavior

Définition: Domestic Cat (Felis catus)

A domestic cat, also known as Felis catus, is a small carnivorous mammal that has been domesticated and kept as a pet or companion animal by humans. Recognized for their agility, playful behavior, and independent nature, domestic cats are characterized by their retractable claws, keen senses, and varied coat colors and patterns. They have evolved from wild ancestors and have become one of the most popular pets globally due to their adaptability to indoor life, their ability to control pests, and their social interactions with humans. Domestic cats typically have a lifespan of 12 to 15 years when kept indoors, with behaviors including grooming, scratching, and purring contributing to their well-being and communication with their human companions.

What is the primary diet of domestic cats?

Answer: Domestic cats are obligate carnivores, meaning their primary diet consists of meat.

What is the purpose of a cat's whiskers?

Answer: A cat's whiskers are highly sensitive and serve as a tool for spatial